MARRIAGE.

Hongsong, November 7rh, 1874.

A struct question which might be easily settled upon some reasonable and satisfactory basis, crops up from time to time at the Police and Supreme Courts in a rather undignified form. It happens at times that an interpreter is required for Hindostance or some other language for which a regular interpreter is not provided; and under such circumstances, it has been the practice of the one pair gold earrings, one gold pin, four gold Courts usually to call upon some govern | coins ($60) and some silver. ment official, who happens to be present to the same day the second defendant and another perform the office of interpreter without fee man came to his shop with all the gold coumeror reward. It has been objected not without atcd and saked him if they were gold. He saw reason that such work is not what the gou. Our readers will no taken to Canton. doubt recollect two or three cases of recent occurrence where this question arose, the last instance being in the Summary Court, when Mr. Justice Snowden promised to send an application for payment to the proper quarter, expressing his opinion that the work discharged. ought to be, paid for, therein differing from Mr. Russell, the Police Magistrate, who, when the same question arose before him, considered that a government official ought to be willing to render a service of the kind-without extra emolument. We trust, however, that the view of Mr. Snownen may be acted upon in preference to Mr. Russell, and imagine that the latter gentleman will possibly upon further consideration alter the opinion formed upon the spur of the moment in the case which came before him. There is a very fair test which can be applied to the solution of the matter, which wo doubt-not-Mr. Russell's semmen will cause him to recognise so soon as it is pointed out. It is simply the question whether The robbers then wentaway and ran up the hill. ville, Gibson County, six miles from Hum- in the liver. On the other hand, there was the work which a man is called upon to per. He believed the defendants let in the robbers, form at a given, time fairly emanates from that which he is engaged to do. It is no doubt unreasonable as well as unwise for an night, and a small buy in the bouse said he ers were arrested, taken to Trenton, and placed mation of the bepatic gland were observed, employé either in Government no any other Service to object to doing a little additional work if within his power, when it is of the kind he is engaged to perform, and we should be the last to advocate that additional pay sum of $50. should be given under such circumstances. But the case stands differently when the work has no reasonable connection with his ordinary avocalions, and in most of these cases. the only thing that connects the person called upon to assist the Court with the work is the circumstance of his happening to be able to perform it, and being within call. In such a case it would clearly be only fair and representations. just to pay a reasonable fee for the service, and some simple plan could easily be devised to meet the difficulty. Either those who are acquainted with languages in which interpretation is required should again. be paid an extra amount of service upon the understanding that they would be ! ought to be placed upon the same footing. The second was similar. This principle would not apply to the gentlemen in the Government Service who, ori- taken him. ginally student interpreters of Chinese, have since obtained other appointments, as it was engagement that they would study Chinese in discharged with a caution. order to give the Government the benefit of their knowledge. For such assistance as they motion, and larger salaries than they would in no way engaged, it is only reasonable to place him upon the same footing as other

ALCOHOLISM IN THE WPPER CLASSES The question of alcoholism, which of late versehas given rise to many and important resencehes is still far from being exhausted. The cases which afforded the principal materials for these restrictes having, however, for the most part come from the classes which fill hospitals and refuges, the general characteristics of this affection have doubtless be it brought under observation, but some special features may have escaped notice; especially as regards the effects of alcoholism upon the classes enjoying casy

M. Lendet of Ronen has made a number by the Ten and Silk Inspectors of Capton. For sonservations on these points umought his private patients, the results of which he laid pefore the scientific congress which has inst been held at Lille. In this memoir, published in the Gazette des Hönitaux of Sept. 12th, the first point to which he calls attention is the requent occurrence of alcoholism in the wealthy classes, and the difficulty of diagnosing it when the attention is not drawn directly to this point. He has pointed out as the principa shurncteristics of this state, dyspeptic troubles, nicers of the stomach, alternately appearing and disappearing until profuse intestina homorrhage or homatemesis discloses the gravity of the situation; alcoholic icterus, and effections of the liver, specially cirrhosis, which show-themselves much more frequently in rich men than in workmen; persistent diarrhosi; paralytic affections, singular hypermthetic poenomena, often wrongly ascribed to rbenma-

HARDSHIPS ON POOR PARENTS. Two magistrates, Mr. Newton at Marlborough-street, and Mr. Partridge at Southwark, have had before them a batch of cases arising out of the requirements of the Education Act. Forty summonses, in all had been aken out against parents refusing or neglecting to send their children to school, and numerons instances the magistrates found the charge proved, fining the defendants or committing them to prison in default. The mothers generally attended to answer the com plaint, as their husbands were labouring men. Some of the cases were unquestionably hard. A Mrs. Stacey, of Dudley-street, appeared before Mr. Newton, the charge being that her son had not been to school more than a third of the proper number of attendances. She protested that the boy was regularly sent, but that he was marked "absent" if not there before the roll was called that he was always sent in proper time, and hat on one occusion she went to the school and found him there, although he had been marked absent. Mr. Newton said that the boy must be in his place before the roll was called, and he fined Mrs. Stacey a shilling and coats. Sh declared that she could not pay; her husband was out of work, and there was no money in the bonse. The magistrate answered that be could only administer the law as he found it: the fine land costs must be paid. So we presume the poor woman or her busband went to prison. in another case the mother sent her child, ittle girl, to school; but she was occasionally wanted at home "to mind the baby moreover, the woman had had a good offer for he daughter and herself to go hop-picking, and wished she might be allowed to thus cara something for the support of the children. Newton thought it would be better for the girl not to go hopping, and fined the mother 3s. but, on her representation that she had only another case, the truent pupil was needed at most uncertain and capricions sea, upon home to take care of an imbecile brother, who adjourned the summons. Now, on the first blush, it would seem that much hardship was dealt out by the requirements of the Act to who was fined because her child, though suspension of Clewes & Co. state that a delay actually at school, was a few minutes late, certainly claims sympathy. We must remember however, that the magistrate is, after all, the best judge as to the facts precented, and that a certain amount of eversion is needed if the Act is not to remain a dead letter. Granting this. it may, nevertheless, be admitted that a certain clasticity in carrying out its provisions should be introduced; for it is assuredly a mistake to ed the fact that one of the firm's extended notes apply the same rule to children altogether

I worked opposed to union to magnify these differences; I in my garden vigorously, turning and returnbut the duty of Churchmen was as far as posting the few feet of soil where I cultivated my sible to diminish these differences, and at the potatoes and beans. Every day, when I was same time to remember that there must be a not observed, I practised the movements that I should have to make in effecting the descent. Some months before Villette and I had cleared out the mouth of the spout to which I had to fasten my rope, and then we carefully closed it up again, so that the warders might suspect nothing. It was on the eve of my escape, Saturday evening, that I fixed the rope myself to the gargoyle. The directors and the warders were at dinner. On Sunday afternoon, when I saw the Italian steamer doubling the point of Antibes, I said to Villette, 'I believe it will be for this evening.' The colonel, although not wanting in courage, could not disguise-his emotion. He looked so preoccupied, so uneasy, that the warders would infallibly have suspected the whole business if they could have seen my poor friend at that moment. As to me, I preserved my ordinary culm. At halfpast six, the moment when everybody-director and warders-were diving, we being supposed to be busy watering our tomatoes and our haricots, I asked Villette to bring from his room the descending rope. He came directly with the rope concealed and r his paletot. He threw it down, and I fastened the end to the iron I had prepared. 'Now,' said, I, 'I am sure I can descend the rope as easily as when I was fiveand-twenty.' From there we went to the dining-room. Neither of us cared for dinner. For myself, knowing that I should be in the water in the evening. I took only a little soup. Thence we went out for our usual promounde: on the terrace. M. Marchi joined us. I complained of the feebleness of my legs, and said that I was fatigued that evening. We finished, I hardly know how, by talking astronomy. Alluding to an article in the Univers which I had just been reading on shooting stars, I said we should have several that night. 'Oh,' replied M. Marchi looking up to the sky, that does not seem very probable. Ah well, I replied, there will be at least one to-night. Certainly M. Marchi, had very little idea to what I alluded. At length the director bade me good evening, and departed along with Villette. Then slone-absolutely slone-I went towards my rope, mounted the parapet, and effected my descent with all the difficulties and all the incidents which Madame Bazaine has described. As to the matches which have provoked so much criticism, nothing could be more simple. We had them dried for a long time before, and I these poor people, and the case of the mother had a number of them in my pocket. It was not difficult, spite of the wind, to strike a light for a moment, which was quite enough to render me visible from below by my wife. "'I have yet to learn,' said the interviewer, how the rope was unbooked.' I am about to tell you, answered the Marshal since now it can > he should come out about five o'clock in the morning, and, as there was not much surveillance over him he should nubook, the rope and throw it down upon the rocks. In that way they would be the longer in finding out the escape, and that would give us a few hours start in case I should not succeed in getting out of French waters. Meanwhile, whether it really was Villette who threw down the rope, or a warder who did it to escape the censures of the director, I really know nothing, for I have not seen my friend Villette since. In so far asconcerns the Commandant Doincau, his effective participation went further than the desputch which was mentioned at the trial. It was be, for example, who recommended the employment of the girdle and the small cord as being likely to be of great assistance in descending a rope twenty-seven metres long. There was a project of evasion in which Doineau would have consented to play a part-quite suited to his adventurous disposition—in the case, name. ly, where I should have been obliged to land at Cannes. We should have had to cross the mountains into Italy on the books of males. Doineau, who knew the country well, would have taken the command of the little expedition. In that case, also, the young English women would have been very useful. Perhaps you do not know how they come to be mixed up with my history. They used to come every day to take a trip on the sen. They onme near the fort, and when they found themselves within hearing they used to sing operatio or religious sire, according to the buseur of the moment. At first that was a more amusement for Villette and me. As we did not know them personally we distinguished them by the colour of their dress. There was the blue dress and and the pink dress.' We became more and more interested in these young persons, and at last discovered in them unacquatomed devotion, of which happily we had not need to avail our-

Mr. Digby Seymour said he was very sorr that the interval that had taken place since the conviction had not afforded the means of effecting some arrangement between the parties; otherwise be should have had an opportunity of addressing the Court in different terms. and he had brought matters before the Court which were calculated to aggravate the confluct of the defendant. Many of these matters were ansceptible of explanation, and in one instance where the defendant had withdrawn his apology there was a dispute about a cheque, and the defendant, after he had made the apology, die. severed that he was in the right, and therefore withdrew the apology he had unde. Mr. Digby Seymour replied that this was so : but he believed there was no doubt that the conduct of the defendant was to be ascribed to the circumstance to which he had alluded; and there was this redeeming point in the defendant's conduct, that that be had not published the libelious statements anonymously, but had signed his own name, and avowed himself at the author of them. He now, however, solemnly, magistrates may be inclined not to increase the undertook never, either directly or indirectly, facilities for drinking, but to do all in their any of his family, or any of his friends; that he would obey the law as it had been laid down by his lordship, the defendant at the name time admitting that he had been properly convicted of this offence. The learned counsel added that he hoped his lordship would consider this publie apology to be sufficient, and that the Court would not subject the defendant to the disgrace and pain of imprisonment. In addition to the apology, the defendant would provide ample security, in the shape of sureties, to appear and receive judgment if called upon to do so, in the event of his breaking the pledge given not to repeat the offence.

Buron Bramwell, after conferring for a considerable time with the learned Recorder, said that no doubt the learned counsel for she defendant, acting upon his instructions, believed what he had stated with regard to the intention of the defendant, but the Court would be glad to know whether the defendant bimself was ready, to state publicly that he adopted what had been stated by his learned counsel, and undertook to adhere to it.

. . Mr. Pugin: I am quite ready to attend to the suggestion of the Court, and to state publicly that every word that has been uttered by my dearned connect was said with my authority. Baron Bramwell observed that, strictly speak. ing a presecutor had no right to interfere in any way with regard to the judgment in a case of this description. The prosecution was not instituted in his behalf, but in that of the public. In this case, however, he would suppose that the defendant should consent to forego the costs to which he might be entitled upon his acquittal at the former trial in this court, and also undertake to pay the expenses of the present prosceution in addition, giving security to appear and receive the judgment of the Court upon the present conviction if he should be called upon to do so. Would such a course be satisfactory to the counsel for the prosecution? Mr. Metcalfe, after conferring with Mr. Herbert and Mr. G. Lewis, the solicitor for the prosecution, replied that be must adhere to what be bad orginally said, that it was not considered that this would be a sufficient security against a repetition of the offence by the defendant. Prayer!-Women's Temperance Crusade.—As a part of the community exposed to the most bitter suffering and wrongs from the evils of the liquor truffic, a public meeting of women only will be held on Sunday afternoon next, at three o'clock, in the Young Men's Temperance Hall, Hardman-street, when prayer will be offered that the blessing of God may rest upon the Women's Temperance power to reduce the number of public-houses. which are causing so much suffering and sorrow to ourselves and families. Ministers, Sanday school teachers, and other Christian workers LADIES AND CHILDREN'S OUTFITTERS, are earnestly desired to offer prayer on bahalf of the above objects in their public ministrations." A meeting in accordance with the above announcement was held on Sunday afternoon at the Young Men's Temperance Hall. There was not so many present as had been expected. Indee the attendance was very select, and there was a conspicuous absence of the class of woman who really suffer most from our national vice of drunkenness. A lew enthusiastic ladies, presided over by Mrs. B. Golder, formed the meething. An address by the lady president, some singing of temperance bymus, and very hearty praying, cocupied nearly an hour, but the most practical part of the proceedings came after, when a memorial to the licensing mugistrates, praying them to grant no more licences, was adopted. A de putation was appointed to wait upon the magistrates with the memorial. COMMERCIAL INTELLIGENCE.
